Zhu Di, Emperor Yongle

Zhu Di (1360-1424 A.D.), Emperor Zhu Yuanzhang's son, was an outstanding and remarkable emperor of the Ming Dynasty. Sporting a well-groomed beard he was pleasant and good-looking. He was known for his wisdom and bold vision. He was first granted the title of Lord of Yan and stationed in Beiping (Beijing today) in the fourth year of Emperor Jianwen's reign (1402) he conquered Jingshi (Nanjing today) and declared himself emperor. During his reign, he stressed farming and boosted socioeconomic development. He later moved the capital to Beijing where he built the imperial palace (today's Forbidden City). He had the Grand Canal dredged, making Beijing the country's political, economic and cultural centre. He despatched Zheng He to lead a large fleet sailing to the Southeast Asia, Arabic Peninsula and east coast of Africa. Consequently, Zheng's voyages promoted the cultural and economic exchanges between the Chinese nation and the Asian and African countries. Zhu assigned Xie Jin to compile 'The Great Encyclopedia in the Reign of Emperor Yongle', which preserved a large number of ancient classics and enhanced national culture. He led his army to conquer the area north of the desert and build guardian stations in China's northeastern and northwestern regions and maintained stability and unity of the Ming Dynasty. He had been recorded in the annals of history for his great deeds in his 22-year reign. As a great man in the Chinese history, he had made great contribution to the Prosperous Era of Yongle in the Ming Dynasty.
